Terminator X, formally known as Norman Rogers, is an American DJ who was a part of the famous American Hip Hop group, Public Enemy. Originated in 1985 by Chuck D and Flavor Flav, it gained popularity by spreading political messages through their music. He stood alongside his members up until 1998 when he had quit.

Article written by Jazmyn Summers, EUR Exclusive: Public Enemy DJ Terminator X Spills the Tea on Chuck D & Flava Flav Beef / WATCH, had mentioned, "He pioneered a unique take on the transformer scratch on songs like Rebel without a Pause." She went ahead on mentioning a few more hits of his contribution like "Fight the Power" and "By the Time I get To Arizona", claiming he was "The legendary scratcher" (2021). He had left the group in 1998 after 13 years because of how cutthroat the industry was when surrounded by money. Article, Terminator X Says Music Biz & Public Enemy's "Greed" Is Why He Left Rap, X had stated "I decided that I was coming home to my music only on my terms and I would not let the music 'business' come between us again." (X, 2014). He has also been helping out with his family Ostrich's farm since then.

Although Terminator X was also a big contribution within Public Enemy, majority of his credits comes from his former band, Public Enemy or from his own two albums. He is now djing at local events, promoting events occasionally on his social media, usually based in North Carolina. Though, he is available for booking requests if need be on his official website.
